Assignment 5

Climate change is affecting tourism in my country in several notable ways. First, the climate is becoming less stable, with more heatwaves, heavy rain events, and storms affecting people's ability to travel. Additionally, tourists are becoming less predictable in their travel choices during certain parts of the year, as they tend to travel in the summer. There will be fewer tourists, and the number of tourists is acceptable. In addition, many of our tourist attractions are also changing. For example, our beaches are becoming smaller, forests are becoming dryer, and there is less snow and ice in the mountains, meaning fewer tourists are attracted to these places year after year.

Next, tourist travel behaviors are changing. The time of year when tourists travel is changing, and they are also traveling to sites that they perceive as safer, cooler, or both. In some cases, tourists decide to avoid my country altogether and travel to a place they believe has a lower chance of experiencing unfavorable weather conditions.

To help address these changes, the provincial and federal governments are making efforts to improve the situation through the development of natural area protections, eco-tourism policies, and the promotion of environmentally friendly travel. The government has developed policies and implemented regulations and programs to mitigate climate change.

The private sector has also made attempts to help, as many hotels and resorts are trying to become more eco-friendly, utilizing solar power, reducing waste, and minimizing harm to the environment. In some cases, the resort or hotel offers tours to support local economies and promote nature conservation.

In conclusion, climate change is having a significant impact on tourism, but some provincial and federal governments, as well as private businesses, are taking steps to address it.
