Question 1. Discuss the role of attribute listing in Heritage impact assignment. How can a tribute listing support the protection, management, and conservation of heritage sites ?

Answer: Attribute listing is an important part of Heritage impact assignment (HIA) because it identifies the scientific physical, cultural, social and historical features that give a heritage site its significance . Instead of considering a heritage site as a single object ,attribute listing breaks it's significance into identifiable elements that can be documented, assessed and protected. Attributes include buildings, architectural features, architectural remains, landscapes, views, traditions, religious practices, historical associations and community value dot identifying these attributes help heritage manages understand but needs to be protected before a new development or change it approved. Cording to INCOMS (2011) , Heritage impact assignment should consider the values and attributes that contribute to the significance of a heritage property.

Attribute listing also provides a clear baseline conditions. This allows assessors to compare the axisting condition of the site with possible future changes. For example it a proposed building could block and important history view, the view can be identified as an attribute and its vulnerability can be assisted.similary, construction vibration could be assessed against the condition of heritage structures.

Another important role is prioritisation role is prioritisation . Not all attributes have the same level of importance or vulnerability. Listing attributes allows Heritage manager to identify highly significant future that require stronger protection. It also helps decision makers decide suitable mitigation measures, such as changing the location height or design of a proposed development.

Attribute listing supports long -term management and conservation because the information can be used from monitoring. Changes in the condition of important attributes can be recorded over time, allowing Problems to be identified early.it camp also improve communication with local communities and stakeholders because the reasons for protecting particular future become clearer.

Overall, attributes listing greater a systematic connection between heritage significance, impact assignment and conservation decisions. It ensures that development is considered in relation to the specific values that make a heritage site important and helps protect whose values for future generation (UNESCO. 2011).
